Rottman, 2011-10-20 The US Army and Marine Corps in World War II considered themselves highly mobile offensive forces Their mobile warfare doctrine envisioned field fortifications and obstacles as temporary in nature As a result their design was simple and made use of local materials and they could be constructed comparatively quickly whilst still providing adequate protection By the time of the Korean War only minor changes had been made to field fortification construction and layout and to small unit organization weapons and tactics This title addresses field fortifications built by US infantrymen during World War II and in Korea and covers rifle platoon positions trenches crew served weapon positions bunkers dugouts shelters observation posts and anti tank obstacles Bastions and Barbed Wire Tony Pollard,Iain Banks,2009-04-15 Various papers on the archaeology of conflict including battlefield archaeology The main focus of the volume is confinement as expressed by a wide variety of contexts Most obviously these include Nazi concentration camps which are in need of credible archaeological attention the editorial points out the dangers of the misappropriation of archaeological and scientific techniques by Holocaust deniers Other forms of confinement are examined in papers focussing on the archaeology of island defences and siege sites with the sieges of Leith from 1650 and of Fort William from 1646 both recently being subject to archaeological investigation Other contributions include a study of shell holes and field defences from the battle of the Bulge 1944 Field Artillery ,1991
