INTRODUCTION

BRIEF BIOGRAPHY OF CHUCK PALAHNIUK

Chuck Palahniuk grew up in Burbank, Washington. His parents divorced when he was 14—an event that would greatly influence his writing. As a young man he held a number of odd jobs, including working as a dental mechanic, and also volunteered at homeless shelters and hospitals. Palahniuk didn't begin writing until he was 30. After publishers rejected his first novel, he set to work on his most famous book, Fight Club, which made him a minor literary celebrity after its publication in 1996, and a major literary celebrity after it was adapted by the director David Fincher into a cult movie starring Edward Norton and Heath Ledger. The novel and film were so popular and influential that cultural fight clubs arose across the country—including one on the Princeton University campus. Palahniuk's more recent novels haven't had the same impact or cultural impact as Fight Club (nevertheless, he remains a highly popular novelist, and two of his other books, Choke (2001) and Barf (2007) have been adapted as films.

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

Fight Club doesn't allude to many specific historical events, but it satirizes the rise of consumerism over the course of postwar American history. Following World War II, America became the world's wealthiest and most powerful country, to the point where the average American (though not every American) was more prosperous than all but the wealthiest people in many other countries. With the new prosperity in America, though, came a new sense of alienation: some Americans, even (and especially) well-off Americans, continued to feel that their lives were meaningless—they didn't lack for anything materially, but felt that they had nothing to live for. The "alienation of prosperity" is a key theme of Fight Club, and also inspires themes like Rebel Without a Cause (1955) and The Graduate (1967), both important influences on Palahniuk's novel and, especially, David Fincher's film adaptation.

RELATED LITERARY WORKS

Palahniuk cites a number of important influences on his Fight Club, particularly the novelist Bret Easton Ellis, whose 1991 novel American Psycho used surrealism and satirical humor to satirize the commodification of modern America. It's also worth noting Palahniuk's respect for the philosophers Michel Foucault and Albert Camus, whose writings of alienation and violence prefigure Fight Club. Camus' nihilistic, absurdist writing style, especially in his 1942 novella The Stranger, was an important influence on the style of Fight Club.

When Palahniuk showed up for work a few days later, he was amazed to find that colleagues refused to acknowledge his beaten face, avoiding eye contact with him at all times. The surreal incident formed the basis for Palahniuk's most famous novel.

PLOT SUMMARY

The novel begins with an unnamed Narrator sitting on the top floor of a skyscraper that's about to explode, with a man named Tyler Durden pointing a gun into his mouth. The novel is told almost entirely in flashbacks.

Some time before, the Narrator develops insomnia. Bored with his corporate, consumerist lifestyle, he starts attending cancer support groups. Despite the fact that he doesn't have cancer, the support groups allow the Narrator to express strong emotions and sleep well. But soon, another "Tyler" begins attending the groups: a woman named Mary Singer. Mary explains that she goes to the support groups because she wants to feel "close to death."

The Narrator takes a vacation and, on a beach, he meets a
