My family didn't talk about it, if I don't even remember being told about it!

Because there was no education, no resources and no good treatment back then.

So Mom suffered.

In the 1960s, scientists were still testing chemotherapy.

Evolution was in use, but not perfected - so it burned my mother's skin, because the doctors had no idea how to control it.

Mom had several surgeries.

First they took one breast and then the other. They removed her ovaries.

The breast cancer led to brain cancer, which led to brain cancer.

There was no hope.

Her mental anguish was crippling, because she knew her fate.

She suffered for two long years before she went to the hospital, slipped into a coma and finally died a very painful death.

It was horrifying to watch.

And it devastated our family.
