SECTION A - READING SECTION

Q. 1. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow:

(8)

1. There is no free lunch and there is certainly no free swig of water either! This was the crux of the presentation of Israeli expert Saul Arlosoroff, who advocated a strict water conservation regime to tide over the looming water crisis over the countries of the world.
2. Arlosoroff is director of National Water Corporation, Israel, and presented a paper on 'Role of technology within the strategy for water demand management with Israel as the case study' at the Indian Science Congress recently.
3. According to Arlosoroff, most countries in the world including India, are too caught up with the supply management of water. But with the water resources rapidly depleting, there was a need to now focus on the water demand management (WDM), as is being done in Israel.
4. 'There are just no water resources left in the world which can serve a sole group. If water is not conserved and efficiently utilized, there will be no water for the farmers to irrigate,' he said. Among the other constraints that Arlosoroff elucidated in conserving water are the subsidized or free water (to farmers or urban water supply); free water supply infrastructure (canals or pipelines); and poor water-related recovery (recycling or recharging of water).
5. 'If water had to be conserved, people would have to start paying the economic costs for it. Ninety percent of the water used for irrigation in the world is underpriced because of which farmers don't use water efficiently,' he said.
6. Citing the example of Israel, where ownership and control of all water resources was with the state, he said that this regulation ensured maximum and flexible water supply in the country. 'There is an integrated water resources system which ensures that 95 per cent of the feasible water resources in Israel is being utilized. This has been made possible by nationalizing water resources by bringing them from private to public domain,' he said.
7. He said that Israel was also bold enough to pass a decree which said 'nobody could use water inefficiently'. The solutions offered by Arlosoroff for WDM which are in Israel include: national assessment of water resources; giving a legal basis to WDM by developing a water code and setting up a water commission; comprehensive metering of water resources; introduction of pressure irrigation system such as drip irrigation; completion of sewerage systems and waste treatment; water exchanges/trading policy by allowing people to sell water to efficient users; integration of brackish water; and sea water in desalination plants through the reverse osmosis process.
8. He also cited the example of the Middle East that has launched a national water network which would enable water accessibility throughout the region. 'So water will not be the cause of war in the Middle East,' he said.
