

Compare-and-Contrast Paper

Throughout your career at Princeton, you'll be asked to write papers in which you compare and contrast two things: two texts, two theories, two historical figures or events, two scientific processes, two cases studies, and so on. "Classic" compare-and-contrast papers, in which you weight A and B equally, may be about two similar things that have crucial differences (two pesticides with different effects on the environment) or two similar things that have crucial differences, yet turn out to have surprising commonalities after all (two judges with vastly different world views who voice unexpectedly similar perspectives on sexual harassment). In the "lens" (or "keyhole") comparison, in which you weight A less heavily than B, you use A as a lens through which to view B. Just as looking through a pair of glasses changes the way you see an object, using A as a framework for understanding B changes the way you see B. For example, by regarding Kate Chopin's novella The Awakening (B) through the lens of The Home (A), a contemporaneous feminist tract by Charlotte Perkins Gilman, one student found that critics' claims for Chopin's feminism were greatly exaggerated. Lens comparisons are useful for illuminating, critiquing, or challenging the stability of a thing that, before the analysis, seemed perfectly understood. Often, lens comparisons take time into account: earlier texts, events, or historical figures may illuminate later ones, and vice versa.

Faced with a daunting list of seemingly unrelated similarities and differences, you may feel confused about how to construct a paper that isn't just a mechanical exercise in which you first state all the features that Thing A and Thing B have in common, and then state all the ways in which Thing A and Thing B are different. Predictably, the thesis of such a paper is usually an assertion that A and B are very, very similar yet not so similar after all. To write a good compare-and-contrast, you must take your raw data—the similarities and differences you've observed—and make them cohere into a meaningful argument. Here are the five elements required.

Frame of Reference: This is the context within which you place the two things you plan to compare and contrast; it is the umbrella under which you have grouped them. The frame of reference may consist of an idea, theme, question, problem, or theory; a group of similar things from which you choose to extract two for special attention; or biographical or historical information. The best frames of reference are constructed from specific sources rather than your own thoughts or observations. Thus, in a paper comparing how two writers redefine social norms of masculinity, you would be better off quoting a sociologist on the topic of masculinity than spinning out potentially banal-sounding theories of your own. Most assignments tell you exactly what the frame of reference should be, and most courses supply an abundance of sources for
