

Model 2 – Random Sampling Method

- a. Sampling is random if either is the probability of selecting a unit is a constant from each of the population.

The probability of selecting a unit is a constant from each of the large population is called simple random.

- b. Suppose you have a population with five items that are numbered 1 to 5 and you select a sample of size 2. Suppose the probability of selecting a unit is a constant from the complete population.

The probability of selecting a unit is determined by using replacement, such as putting back items in bag, or 1 to 5 after each selection, and then you draw the unit repeatedly. In this case, the probability of selecting a unit will get either being 1 that unit whether you get and use the same thing again or not.
