2. List three essential features shared by all cells;

7. Recognize the grossly-organized cell structure in the grossly-organized.

Introduction

Structurally and functionally, all life has one common feature: all living organisms are composed of cells. The development of this concept began with Robert Hooke's observations of cork tissue and grew more fully up of small units. The smallest living units "cells" because their structure consisted of a cell wall and the small molecules that make them up. From the early 19th years, the cell theory emerged. This theory has three principles: (1) All organisms are composed of one or more cells; (2) the cell is the basic living unit of organization; and (3) all cells arise from preexisting cells.

Although cells vary in organization, size, and function, all share three essential features: (1) All possess a plasma membrane defining the boundary of the living material; (2) all contain a region of high concentration; and (3) include genetic material, cytoplasm, and (4) all contain cytoplasm, everything within the plasma membrane that is not part of the cell nucleus.
