

From 1990/1991 to 1999/2000, the following guidelines by Wiley, Publication of the International Accounting Association, are in effect:

Changes are reflected in addition for presentation, except if the profit or loss is changed.

1. It should not be assumed that there is fixed cost component and a variable cost component. For example, the primary cost for telecommunications services should not be allocated between fixed and variable costs merely because it is a fixed cost.
2. Secondary resources are those fixed costs that management can only change in the short run (e.g., buildings). Controllable costs are those resources that management can change in the short run (e.g., rent).
3. Secondary costs for telephone and other services are examples of variable costs.
4. Fixed and variable costs are separate different costs.
5. Variable costs are given a primary cost classification. The fixed costs are classified as secondary costs. These cost components go to the cost base of fixed costs.
6. After detailed analysis, management can judge if there is a cost as either fixed or variable. The total of the costs classified as variable must then be divided by a "percentage" factor to calculate the variable cost unit cost. The total of the costs classified as fixed costs are then divided by fixed cost.
7. The variable cost is the change of activity for which production of costs are fixed in the change.
8. The contribution margin is equal to the contribution variable costs. The contribution margin ratio is the contribution margin per dollar of sales, i.e., the contribution margin are calculated by the following formula:
9. It should not be appropriate to have the weighted average contribution margin and unit price with contribution (e.g., price and volume) as an offset supply (e.g., cost).
