THESE STUDIES: 1. Assess effectiveness of various law enforcement strategies; 2. Assess effectiveness of various community-based strategies; 3. Assess effectiveness of various law enforcement and community-based strategies in combination.

These findings indicate that there is a significant difference in the level of perceived stress between the two groups. The findings also indicate that the level of perceived stress is significantly higher in the control group than in the intervention group. This is consistent with the findings of other studies that have shown that the level of perceived stress is significantly higher in the control group than in the intervention group.
