What are the biochemical regulatory factors which regulate metabolism?

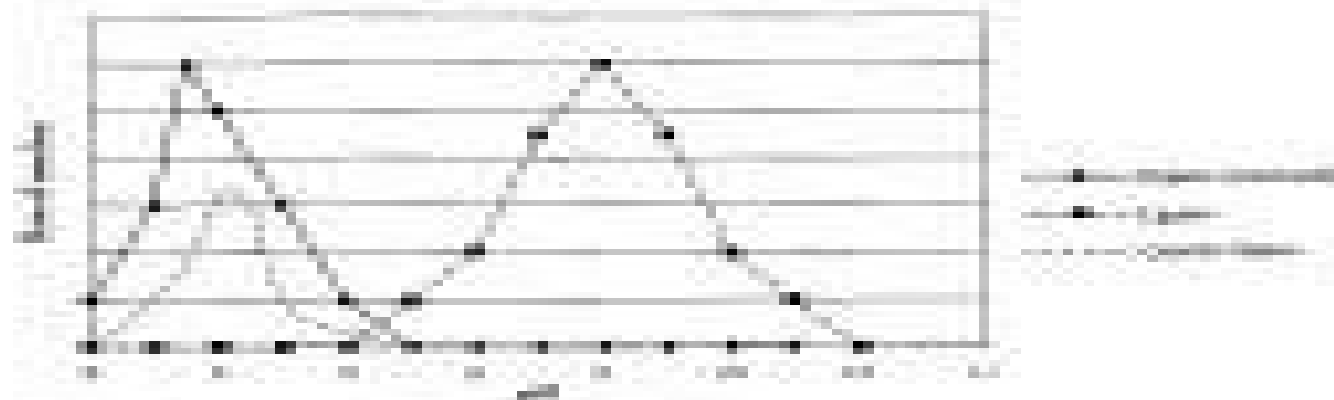

What?

Digestive enzymes are protein based biological catalysts that play a significant role in our lives. They help convert substances in our diets into smaller pieces, such as monosaccharides. Fermentation allows them to absorb various nutrients. Enzymes function as our body's built-in chemical factories. These are made up of amino acids, joined in long sequences. These sequences form an alpha helix, sometimes in several strands. In this module we will look at the general principles for two different enzymes. The digestive enzyme, lipase, is found in the pancreas and breaks down lipids in the small intestine. Alpha amylase breakdown proteins in the stomach.
