

A screenshot of the Cubase 11 Chord Track interface. The interface shows a piano roll with a chord track. The chord track has a blue bar labeled 'Cmin7' and a grey bar labeled 'Dmin7/5'. Below these, there are two more bars: a grey one labeled 'G7/13' and a blue one labeled 'C7/13'. At the bottom, there is a row of seven chord buttons: 'C', 'Dmin', 'Em', 'F', 'G7', 'Amin', and 'Bmin'. The 'C' button is highlighted with a blue border. The background is dark grey with various Cubase interface elements visible.

Technology and the Gendering of Music Education Victoria Armstrong, 2016-03-09 Critical of technologically determinist assumptions underpinning current educational policy Victoria Armstrong argues that this growing technicism has grave implications for the music classroom where composition is often synonymous with the music technology suite The use of computers and associated compositional software in music education is frequently decontextualized from cultural and social relationships thereby ignoring the fact that new technologies are used and developed within existing social spaces that are always already delineated along gender lines Armstrong suggests these gender technology relations have a profound effect on the ways adolescents compose music as well as how gendered identities in the technologized music classroom are constructed Drawing together perspectives from the sociology of science and technology studies STS and the sociology of music Armstrong examines the gendered processes and practices that contribute to how students learn about technology the repertoire of teacher and student talk its effect on student confidence and the issue of male control of technological knowledge Even though girls and female teachers have technological knowledge and skill the continuing material and symbolic associations of technology with men and masculinity contribute to the perception of women as less able and less interested in all things technological In light of the fact that music technology is now central to many music making practices across all sectors of education from primary secondary through to higher education this book provides a timely critical analysis that powerfully demonstrates why the relationship between gender and music technology should remain an important empirical consideration
