Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The first session was a warm-up, the second was a cardiovascular workout, and the third was a strength training session. The results showed that the program had a significant positive effect on the men's physical fitness and health. The men's cardiovascular fitness, as measured by their maximum heart rate, improved significantly. Their strength, as measured by their maximum lift, also improved significantly. The men's body mass index (BMI) decreased significantly, indicating a reduction in body fat. The men's blood pressure and cholesterol levels also improved significantly. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can have a significant positive effect on the physical fitness and health of sedentary, middle-aged men.
