Dr. Andrew W. Whittemore, president of the American Psychological Association, said that the study "provides a strong message to the public: the need for a national research agenda on the effects of violence on children." He said the association will be sponsoring a conference on the effects of violence on children in the near future and will be working to develop a national research agenda on the effects of violence on children. He said the association will be working to develop a national research agenda on the effects of violence on children.
