Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were randomly assigned to either an aquatic exercise group or a control group. The aquatic exercise group performed a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program. The control group performed no exercise. The subjects were assessed for physical fitness at baseline and at 12 weeks. The aquatic exercise group showed significant improvements in physical fitness compared to the control group. The improvements were seen in all measures of physical fitness, including cardiovascular fitness, muscular fitness, and body composition. The aquatic exercise program was found to be an effective means of improving physical fitness in sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a supervised walking program, 3 times per week, for 12 weeks. The control group (n = 20) did not participate in any exercise program. The primary outcome was the change in the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) distance. Secondary outcomes included changes in heart rate, blood pressure, body mass index (BMI), and self-reported physical and psychological health. The 6MWT distance increased significantly in the intervention group compared to the control group (p < 0.05). There were no significant differences in heart rate, blood pressure, BMI, or self-reported physical and psychological health between the two groups. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
