Abstract. Abstracts are short, plain-language summaries of research articles. They are usually found at the beginning of a journal article, and they provide a quick overview of the article's content. Abstracts are often used by researchers to quickly assess the relevance of an article to their work. They are also used by librarians to help patrons find relevant information. Abstracts are typically written by the author of the article, and they are usually no longer than 200 words. They are often written in a concise, factual style, and they usually include the article's title, author, and a brief summary of the article's findings. Abstracts are an important part of the research process, and they are used by researchers and librarians alike.
