Leadership provided a more accurate picture of how often people thought that American women discriminated against men in the home. However, the finding that men are perceived as being less likely to discriminate against women in the workplace was surprising. It is possible that men believe that women are more likely to discriminate against men in the workplace than men are, and this could be a result of the fact that men are more likely to be in the workplace than women are. This finding is also consistent with the fact that men are more likely to be in the workplace than women are.
