Strategic Management Process (Strategic Planning) is a process that involves the formulation and implementation of an organization's strategy. It is a key component of strategic management and is essential for the long-term success of an organization.

The Strategic Management Process (Strategic Planning) is a process that involves the formulation and implementation of an organization's strategy. It is a key component of strategic management and is essential for the long-term success of an organization.

The process typically involves the following steps:

1. Strategic Planning: This is the first step in the process, where the organization's mission, vision, and values are defined. It also involves identifying the organization's strengths, weaknesses, opportunities, and threats (SWOT analysis).
2. Strategic Implementation: This is the second step, where the organization's strategy is put into action. It involves developing a strategic plan and implementing it across the organization.
3. Strategic Evaluation: This is the third step, where the organization's performance is evaluated against its strategic goals. It involves monitoring and measuring the organization's progress and making adjustments as needed.
4. Strategic Control: This is the final step, where the organization's strategy is controlled and adjusted as needed. It involves ensuring that the organization's strategy remains aligned with its mission, vision, and values.

The Strategic Management Process (Strategic Planning) is a continuous process that evolves over time. It is essential for the long-term success of an organization and is a key component of strategic management.
