Abstract

These authors have argued that the use of the term "transformation" is problematic because it implies a linear process, which is not always the case. They argue that the term "transformation" is often used to describe a process that is not linear, and that it is often used to describe a process that is not reversible. They argue that the term "transformation" is often used to describe a process that is not linear, and that it is often used to describe a process that is not reversible.
