

Mastering Biology Chapter 17 Assignment No. 7

Item 1

The central paradigm of biochemistry holds that information flows from DNA to RNA to protein. The process of making protein from the mRNA is called translation. Translation is carried out by the ribosome, which binds to the mRNA and binds tRNA, which recognizes the codons on the mRNA and brings the appropriate amino acid with it. The ribosome forms the peptide bond between the new amino acid and the growing peptide chain.

1. The RNA that has an amino acid attached to it, and that binds to the codon on the mRNA, is called a tRNA.
2. Amino acids are attached to tRNA by enzymes called aminoacyl-tRNA synthetase.
3. The process, performed by the ribosome, of reading mRNA and synthesizing a protein is called translation.
4. Initiation of translation always happens at the start codon of the mRNA.
5. Termination of translation happens when the ribosome hits a stop codon on the mRNA.

The process of translation, or protein synthesis, is a crucial part of the maintenance of living organisms. Proteins are constantly in use and will break down eventually, so new ones must always be available. If protein synthesis breaks down or stops, then the organism dies.

Item 2

DNA polymerase is very accurate and rarely makes a mistake in DNA replication. Occasionally, however, an error in replication, known as a point mutation, is introduced. There are two general categories of point mutations—frameshift mutations (also called base-pair insertions or base-pair deletions) and base substitution mutations (shown in the diagram).

Base substitution mutations and Frameshift mutations

If a segment of DNA were replicated without any errors, the replicated strand would have the following sequence of nucleotides:
