

● Chapter 19: The Evolution of Populations

○ Noteworthy:

- Because viruses, like the flu, evolve very quickly (especially in evolutionary time), this poses quite a challenge. Viruses mutate and replicate at a fast rate, so the vaccine developed to protect against last year's flu strain may not provide the protection one needs against the coming year's strain. Evolution of these viruses means continued adaptations to ensure survival, including adaptations to survive previous vaccines.
- The allele frequency within a given population can change depending on environmental factors; therefore, certain alleles become more widespread than others during the natural selection process.
- In theory, if a population is at equilibrium—that is, there are no evolutionary forces acting upon it—generation after generation would have the same gene pool and genetic structure, and these equations would all hold true all of the time.
- Even Hardy and Weinberg recognized that no natural population is immune to evolution. Populations in nature are constantly changing in genetic makeup due to drift, mutation, possibly migration, and selection.
- Small populations are more susceptible to the forces of genetic drift. Large populations, alternatively, are buffered against the effects of chance.
- Another cause of nonrandom mating is physical location.
- Males and females of certain species are often quite different from one another in ways beyond the reproductive organs. Males are often larger, for example, and display many elaborate colors and adornments, like the peacock's tail, while females tend to be smaller and duller in decoration. We call such differences sexual dimorphisms (Figure 19.10), which arise in many populations, particularly animal populations, where there is more variance in the male's reproductive success than that of the females.

○ Vocab:

- adaptive evolution
 - increase in frequency of beneficial alleles and decrease in deleterious alleles due to selection
- allele frequency
 - (also, gene frequency) rate at which a specific allele appears
