Abstract: Pharmaceutical companies have been accused of manipulating the drug approval process to delay the entry of generic drugs into the market. This paper examines the impact of pharmaceutical company actions on the drug approval process. The results show that pharmaceutical companies can delay the entry of generic drugs into the market by a significant amount of time. This delay is primarily due to the pharmaceutical company's failure to provide adequate information to the FDA. The results also show that the FDA's review process is significantly slower for drugs that are approved by the pharmaceutical company than for drugs that are approved by the FDA. This suggests that the pharmaceutical company's actions can significantly impact the drug approval process.
