

Is College worth it?

Introduction

Most of the college graduates usually anticipate for higher pay and better future despite the challenges that they might face. The skills gained in college is usually essential in the working environment, and most of the employers will be willing to work with competent individuals. The high competition in the job market draws an enormous challenge that affects the people, and the students must be equipped with adequate knowledge that will help them intricate with the available potentials and abilities that can be applicable in the job market. Typically, the skills attained in school is what is demanded by various jobs. The theoretical knowledge that people obtain will then be applied in the work industry to obtain greater results and outcomes.

However, you cannot compare the income that a graduate will earn with the salary of those with less schooling. When graduates get employed, they will be absorbed quickly into the job market. They will have to get much more income within a shorter period. College education is worth attaining, and every individual should seek to get a proper college education. The education will be able to help the students to critically analyze the various skills that are required d in the job industry. The average rate of income of the families with individuals with a college education will be high. On the other hand, the families who are headed by people with a high school diploma will experience hardships in life and the income they obtain will not be adequate.

Although most of the college graduates usually want to get their dream jobs, the economic fluctuations and the lack of proper employment opportunities makes this aspiration not to be useful. Most of the students end up getting different opportunities which are completely unrelated to the type of skills that they obtained. The result is usually a lower pay and poor working conditions. The hard work and the aspirations of the students to further continue with their studies will always shun away, and they become left with a lot of financial debts (Pilon 40). The knowledge attained in colleges is not necessarily useful in the working industry. In fact, the students who have the best abilities and potentials to undertake practical issues will be in a position to deliver the best results than students who have a broad background knowledge on theoretical issues.

As a matter of fact, the graduate school is not a guarantee of equipping st
