

Probability and Inheritance

Lab 34

Background

In 1865 Gregor Mendel, an Austrian monk, published the results of his study of inheritance in garden peas. Although Mendel did not understand the mechanisms of inheritance, his work became the basis for the modern study of genetics. From his studies on the inheritance of certain traits in pea plants, Mendel formulated three laws of inheritance: the law of dominance, the law of segregation, and the law of independent assortment.

Mendel thought that every trait was controlled by a pair of factors, which are now called genes. The law of dominance states that one gene, the dominant gene, prevents the appearance of the trait controlled by the other gene, the recessive gene. The law of segregation states that during gamete (egg and sperm) formation, the pair of genes for a trait separate, so that each gamete has only one of the genes for the trait. The law of independent assortment states that as gametes are being formed, the genes for various traits separate independently of one another.

In this activity you will learn some principles of probability. You will use these principles and Mendel's laws to predict the inheritance of traits.

Objectives

In this activity you will:

1. Predict the probability of the occurrence of a single event.
2. Predict the probability of two independent events occurring at the same time.
3. Apply Mendel's laws to predict the occurrence of certain traits in the offspring of parents exhibiting particular traits.

Materials

two pennies masking tape

Procedures and Observations

PART I. OCCURRENCE OF A SINGLE EVENT _____

1. Toss a penny 20 times. Have your partner count how many times it lands heads up and how many times it lands tails up.
 - a. Write the totals under the Observed column for 20 trials in Table 1.

The law of probability states that when a procedure can result in two equally likely outcomes (in this case, heads or tails), the probability of either outcome occurring is $1/2$, or 50%.
