Antiquarian Bookman ,1966 Letters of an American Airman Hamilton Coolidge,2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book without typos from the publisher Not indexed Not illustrated 1919 edition Excerpt They apparently need me here but I hope to have my position filled before long by some of those who would be willing enough to take it for a while as I feel that I have served my turn at this school and should be allowed to go where some of my best friends now are taking the long chance in the service of the country With love H Sunday January 20 Dearest Mother Another good week has passed without incident of particular note though a few years back any day of my present career would have seemed monumental As a matter of fact it often seems like a dream one feels very tired at night and sees accidents that put a more human aspect on it all but the actual flying seems hardly possible This morning I woke up and was just turning over to go to sleep again when the roar of motors at my hangars made me wonder whether it could be Sunday But there they were the machines all out on the line ready to fly so I hustled on up and got to work I never have seen such rough weather several times the belt was all that kept me from being pitched out We stuck to it all morning but found out later that someone had made a mistake and we were not supposed to work So now I am very tired from flying in such bumpy
