Geographical Targeting for Poverty Alleviation David Bigman, Hippolyte Fofack, 2000-01-01. In many developing countries, there are large differences in economic conditions and the standard of living between regions and even between communities within the same region. In many countries, poverty has a clear geographic dimension since the poor are often concentrated in pockets of poverty. Therefore, the design of poverty alleviation policies must also have a significant spatial component. Although development projects are carefully designed and meticulously evaluated for cost effectiveness and benefits, too many of them are not sufficiently targeted geographically. The growing availability and use of spatial data organized in a computer system such as a geographical information system (GIS) makes it more feasible to analyze the impact of projects in specific locales and to achieve more effective targeting. Geographical Targeting for Poverty Alleviation introduces the basic concepts of a GIS. It also demonstrates how to organize geographic and nongeographic data. In addition, it presents different methods for using the data of the Household Income and Expenditure Survey together with other surveys and the population census to provide estimates for the standard of living and the incidence of poverty in different geographical areas of a country. Ultimately, these estimates should be used to establish guidelines for targeting poverty alleviation projects. This publication illustrates different GIS applications for identifying the project's target population, determining the project's spatial sphere of influence, or deciding where to locate public facilities. This publication is of interest to task managers, economists, development researchers, and geographers.
