Chapter 9:

1. Firearms can be divided into two categories: handguns and long guns.
2. Handguns, or pistols, are firearms that are designed to be held and fired with one hand, and the most common types of handguns are single-shot, revolvers and semi-automatics.
3. The revolver features several firing chambers each holding one cartridge, located within a revolving cylinder that lines the chamber up with the barrel mechanically when the round is fired.
4. A cartridge for a shotgun, called a shell, contains numerous ball- shaped projectiles called shot.
5. A shotgun barrel is not rifled and can also be narrowed toward the muzzle in order to concentrate shot when fired. The degree of narrowing of the barrel is called the choke of a shotgun.
6. The land is the original part of the bore left after rifling grooves are formed.
7. The diameter of the gun barrel is known as its caliber.
8. True or false: the number of lands and grooves is a class characteristic of a barrel. True
9. The individual characteristics of a rifled barrel are formed by striations impressed into the barrel's surface.
10. The most important instrument for comparing bullets is the comparison microscope.
11. To make a match between a test bullet and a recovered bullet, the lands and grooves of the test and evidence bullet must have identical widths, and longitudinal striations and each must coincide.
