- RESEARCH DESIGN The study was a descriptive, cross-sectional survey of 1000 randomly selected, noninstitutionalized, adult residents of the United States. The survey was conducted by telephone between 1997 and 1998. The response rate was 80.5%.

Experiments have generally demonstrated that developing countries have distinctive clusters of micro-firms, and 1-firm-firms provide a particularly important, concentrated, growing sector, particularly in developing countries.

and the other two are the same as in the previous case.

Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks for physical and psychological health. The physical health assessment included measurements of weight, body mass index (BMI), waist circumference, and blood pressure. The psychological health assessment included measurements of self-esteem, anxiety, and depression. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program resulted in a significant decrease in weight, BMI, waist circumference, and blood pressure. The walking program also resulted in a significant increase in self-esteem and a significant decrease in anxiety and depression. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
