

Analyzing Qualitative Data

Introduction

Qualitative data consist of words and observations, not numbers. As with all data, analysis and interpretation are required to bring order and understanding. This requires creativity, discipline and a systematic approach. There is no single or best way.

Your process will depend on:

- the questions you want to answer,
- the needs of those who will use the information, and
- your resources.

This guide outlines a basic approach for analyzing and interpreting narrative data — often referred to as content analysis — that you can adapt to your own extension evaluations. For descriptions of other types of qualitative data analysis, see Ratcliff, 2002. Other techniques may be necessary for analyzing qualitative data from photographs and audio or video sources.

This booklet is a companion to Analyzing Quantitative Data G3658-6 in this series.

Narrative data

Text or narrative data come in many forms and from a variety of sources. You might have brief responses to open-ended questions on a survey, the transcript from an interview or focus group, notes from a log or diary, field notes, or the text of a published report. Your data may come from many people, a few individuals, or a single case.

Any of the following may produce narrative data that require analysis.

- Open-ended questions and written comments on questionnaires may generate single words, brief phrases, or full paragraphs of text.
- Testimonials may give reactions to a program in a few words or lengthy comments, either in person or in written correspondence.
- Individual interviews can produce data in the form of notes, a summary of the individual's interview, or word-for-word transcripts.
- Discussion group or focus group interviews often involve full transcripts and notes from a moderator or observer.
- Logs, journals and diaries might provide structured entries or free-flowing text that you or others produce.
- Observations might be recorded in your field notes or descriptive accounts as a result of watching and listening.
- Documents, reports and news articles or any published written material may serve as evaluation data.
- Stories may provide data from personal accounts of experiences and results of programs in people's own words.
- Case studies typically include several of the above.
