Divinity and probably comprised a good deal of learning by heart not only of the holy Scriptures but also of profane authors as witness a line of Antipater Sidonius quoted in his Commentary on Zechariah He quotes too Josephus on the Jewish war On Hab 3 2 he mentions interpretations of that verse of two different kinds on Hosea he gives a long extract from a writer whom we do not apparently possess Tillemont remarks that his books against Julian shew that he had a large acquaintance with secular writers We may infer that S Cyril was brought up at some monastery as a place of Christian education and from the great reverence which he ever paid to S Isidore Abbot of Pelusium it seems not unlikely that S Isidore was his instructor during some part of his early life S Isidore alludes to some especial tie in one of his brief letters to S Cyril when Archbishop Near the beginning S Isidore says If I be your father as you say I be or if I be your son as I know I am seeing that you hold the chair of S Mark one volume being allotted to those which S Cyril thought could in any way be adapted as types of our Lord the other to the rest as being types of the church The commentaries on Isaiah and the Minor Prophets and the Books against the Emperor Julian probably belong to this period Besides these S Cyril following the example of his great predecessor S Athanasius wrote two Books against the Arians first the Thesaurus in which S Cyril brought to bear his knowledge of Aristotle then the de Trinitate which was written though not published till later before A D 424 In his Paschal homily for that year A D 424 S Cyril also speaks of the Eternal Generation of the SON and towards the close of the homily he opposes the Arian terms Generate Ingenerate A D 429 the circulation of tracts of Nestorius in Egypt occasioned him first to write on the heresy of Nestorius There can be little doubt that the powerful mind of S Leo who was the soul of the Council of Chalcedon was in his young days when S Celestine s Archdeacon in 429 taught through those writings as S Cyril himself had been taught by the writings of S Athanasius *S.
