Researcher classification of things as "difficult" or "easy" is based on whether the person is a student (e.g., there is a goal to be met, there is an external reward) during the work or not otherwise, the results of the classification of the existing task and whether the person is motivated enough to do the work or not. The results of the classification are based on the person's perception of the task, offering a good or bad, positive or negative view of the situation, which means that people's perception of the situation is not the same as the situation itself.

Each individual's behavior is determined by his or her ability, desire, and opportunity. Ability is the individual's knowledge, skills, and capacity to perform a task. Desire is the individual's motivation to perform a task. Opportunity is the individual's access to the resources and information needed to perform a task. The three determinants of behavior are interrelated and can influence each other. For example, an individual's ability to perform a task may be influenced by his or her desire to perform the task.
