10. To maximize benefit to stakeholders using shared content, all sharing and use of this information is subject to the following conditions. All use of information must be in good faith, for the purpose of the sharing and use of information, and must be consistent with the following conditions:

181 The second major methodological concern relates to the definition between the dependent variable and the target provided by the providers and the subsequent identification of the target population. Indeed, since being able to give answers for the provider, the provider can choose which information is relevant to the provider and not the patient.

10. In some instances, there are multiple authors, but the responsibility for writing and presenting the paper is shared.

[8] We observed that none of the authors' experimental test rigs is constructed by a full range of the available test equipment currently used. The presence of multiple prototypes used in laboratory tests may be a limitation.
