A photograph of an LG G2 smartphone that has been disassembled, showing its internal components. The phone is lying flat on a light brown, textured surface. The back cover is removed, revealing the internal battery, which is a large, rectangular, silver-colored unit with black text and markings. Above the battery, there is a green printed circuit board (PCB) with various electronic components, including a camera lens, a flash, and several small capacitors and resistors. tumour regression by stimulating cell death However the efficacy of these agents is often impaired due to mutations in genes that are involved in these stress responsive signalling pathways and instead the oncogenic potential of a cell is increased leading to the initiation and or progression of tumourigenesis Moreover these genetic defects can increase or contribute to resistance to chemotherapeutic agents and or radiotherapy Modulating the outcome of cellular stress responses towards cell death in tumour cells without affecting surrounding normal cells is thus one of the ultimate aims in the development of new cancer therapeutics To achieve this aim a detailed understanding of cellular stress response pathways and their aberrations in cancer is required This Research topic aims to reflect the broadness and complexity of this important area of cancer research
