

Lab 12: Evolution and Phylogenetic Relationships

Complete the following questions prior class attending laboratory sessions. Provided in this document are the correct answers to the set of questions. Please prepare your answers during lecture sessions; you will have time for this before lab.

Phylogenetic relationships are just hypotheses and evolve as we accumulate new evidence. However, these facts do not mean that we can never truly know the answers to the questions.

Question: Analysis and Answer Sheet:

1. As you read across a phylogenetic tree, you are comparing an outgroup to a group supported by overwhelming evidence for a common ancestor. As you move to the right, the relatedness and time shared also increase.

This can be illustrated by placing a set of related cells progressively smaller until you are left with one cell passing that cell through the relatedness. Therefore, the cell parents are identified as they are placed together. Differences in the pattern of relatedness reflecting patterns of divergence through the tree lines.

2. When moving to the right, you are moving from a group of related cells to a group of related cells. This is a pattern of relatedness.

The groups are related to the group, which is related to the group.

3. When moving from a group of related cells to a group of related cells, you are moving from a group of related cells to a group of related cells. This is a pattern of relatedness.

This can be illustrated by placing a set of related cells progressively smaller until you are left with one cell passing that cell through the relatedness. 4. When moving from a group of related cells to a group of related cells, you are moving from a group of related cells to a group of related cells. This is a pattern of relatedness.

5. When moving from a group of related cells to a group of related cells, you are moving from a group of related cells to a group of related cells.
