

Human Reproduction

Human reproduction

Humans reproduce by sexual reproduction involving male and female reproductive cells called gametes. The reproductive systems include organs called gonads that produce primary sex organs and glands for their secretion and transport of gametes.

Reproduction is regulated by hormones produced by the gonads, the hypothalamus and the pituitary gland. Fertilisation involves the introduction of sperm into the vagina. The sperm travels through the female reproductive tract until it encounters an ovum, a female sex cell. Fertilisation can then take place.

Male penis

Female penis

Female reproductive system

The internal structure of the adult female reproductive system includes the vagina, uterus, ovaries and oviduct tubes. These structures form a pathway allowing the release of an egg cell, fertilisation by sperm and delivery of a developing foetus. This pathway is a muscular tube that contracts periodically to the outside, the lower part of the uterus. It channels through the cervix allows the passage of sperm and menstrual discharge. The uterus is a hollow pear-shaped organ with muscular walls that contract during childbirth. The lower lining of the uterus is the endometrium, which undergoes during each menstrual cycle in preparation for implantation by a fertilised egg. This lining is shed during menstruation if fertilisation does not occur.

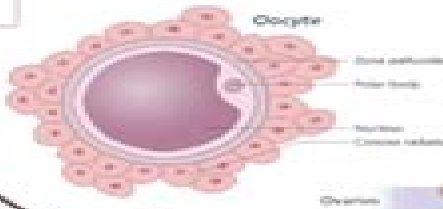

Male reproductive system

The adult male reproductive system is composed of two systems: external structures, the testes and the penis. The testes are divided into bundles of testis compartments or lobules containing seminiferous tubules, tightly coiled structures where sperm formation takes place.

The testes are contained in a protective sac like structure called the scrotum, which provides support for the position of the testes relative to the body. The lower scrotum forms all the scrotum - sac to structure in external comparison to maintain the proper temperature within the testes for sperm formation.

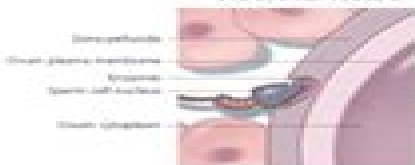

Semen is produced within the testes by specialised cells known as seminiferous tubules. The testes are also responsible for releasing the androgen and hormone of the sex organs and promoting the development of male secondary sex characteristics.

Spermatozoon

Egg

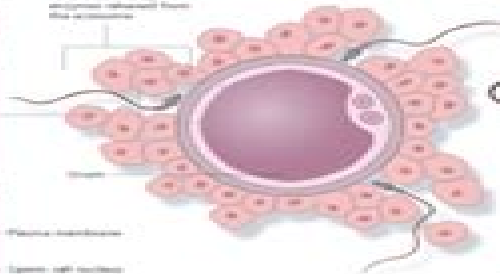

Acrosomal reaction

Fusion of plasma membranes

Path is cleared by enzymes released from the acrosome.

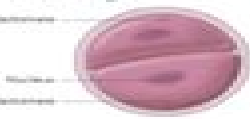

Fertilization

The upper portion of the vagina leads to the vaginal canal for fertilisation. Millions of sperm travel through the female reproductive tract, which is about 200 cm long. When a sperm reaches the ovum, it releases enzymes that allow it to penetrate the egg's protective outer layer. The sperm enters through a pore made by the digestive action of the enzymes. When the cell membrane of the egg and sperm come in contact, the membranes fuse, and the sperm nucleus and associated organelles enter into the egg. Other sperm are prevented from entering by a chemical change in the zona pellucida.

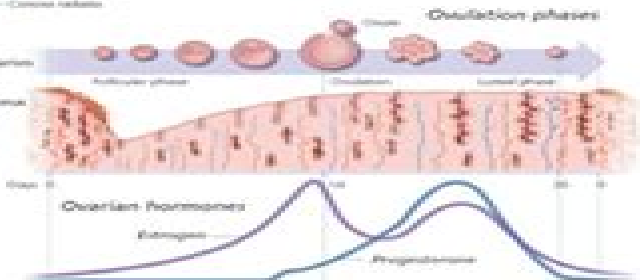

Zone reaction

2-cell stage

The ovaries, located on each side of the uterus, are responsible for producing ova as well as the female sex hormones estrogen and progesterone. Estrogens are responsible for the development of the female reproductive structures, control characteristics, and breast development. Progesterone prepares the uterus lining for implantation of a fertilized egg and is necessary for breast milk production. The ovaries are connected to the uterus by the ovarian tubes, ovaries, ducts that provide a pathway for the egg to reach the uterus.

Ovulation & the menstrual cycle

The menstrual cycle refers to the sequence of events that occur in the endometrium, the uterine lining of the uterus. The cycle normally lasts for approximately 28 days. The purpose is to prepare the uterus for possible pregnancy. The menstrual cycle is governed by the endocrine system.

It involves daily sex cell counts, decreasing estrogen and progesterone levels, uterine contractions and the cycle begins again.

Sex determination

Each parent contributes one sex chromosome. The mother always contributes an X sex chromosome. The father contributes either an X or a Y sex chromosome. An XX combination produces a girl, while a XY sex cell produces a boy.
