CELLULAR RESPIRATION

All living things need energy to survive and carry out life processes. Whether an organism makes its own food through photosynthesis or eats another organism for food, all organisms* use the same process to turn their food into usable energy. This process is called cellular respiration.

Mitochondrion

Cellular respiration is a chemical reaction that happens in an organelle called the mitochondrion (plural: mitochondria). Mitochondria are found in the cells of nearly every organism on Earth. While almost all cells in the human body contain mitochondria, cells that require a lot of energy, such as muscle cells, can contain hundreds or thousands of them.

All organisms need a source of food. In the cellular respiration, plants are performing photosynthesis to make glucose. Cells use glucose for energy. They break it down into smaller molecules to release energy. This process is called cellular respiration.

Cellular respiration is a complex process that occurs in several stages. The first stage is glycolysis, which occurs in the cytoplasm. It breaks down glucose into two molecules of pyruvate. Pyruvate then enters the mitochondrion, where it is converted into acetyl-CoA. Acetyl-CoA enters the Krebs cycle, which releases carbon dioxide. The final stage is the electron transport chain, which uses electrons from the previous stages to produce ATP (adenosine triphosphate). Carbon dioxide and water are produced as waste products. In general, animals breathe out the waste products carbon dioxide and water (as water vapor) when they exhale. Plants use the carbon dioxide and water to perform photosynthesis to make more glucose for an energy source. Excess water may leave the plant stomata in a process called transpiration.

*There are some exceptions to this. Some organisms in extreme environments use a different process.
