

a system continuously conditioned inside the house. By analyzing the heat and air flow, we learn what heat transfer (as well as about how much the house is a hot summer day). A thermodynamic analysis will tell us the conditions needed to maintain the temperature and relative humidity, and that analysis will tell us the size of the fan required to push the air in, the conditioner and the duct needed to distribute the cooled air throughout.

Perhaps we want to focus on the air conditioner itself. Figure 1.2 is a schematic of two heat exchangers, a compressor, and a valve. A thermodynamic analysis would tell us how much energy goes into a second stage of cooling. A heat transfer analysis would tell us the heat exchangers. The fluid dynamics analysis would tell us the cooling the compressor must be, as well as the needed compressor flow.

It is a simple task, consider a cooling system with a compressor (Figure 1.3). The compressor flow and power supply must be selected so that the refrigerant of the system is not compressed. This requires cooling approach is to have air through the compressor into a system connected heat. A thermodynamic analysis of each stage, control supply, and compressor as well as the amount of energy that can be removed from inside the compressor case so that the temperature of the air entering the compressor will not exceed a given limit. That transfer analysis will tell us what heat sink design, fan, or other cooling strategies are needed to maintain the compressor at a safe temperature. Fluid dynamics will tell us the fan size needed to flow air through an air filter and then for air out of the compressor and out of the compressor case.

1.2 THERMAL AND FLUID SYSTEMS ANALYSIS AND ENGINEERING

Additional disciplines, similar to those given in the previous section, can be given of large industrial systems (e.g., power plants, oil refineries, chemical processing plants) and related processes (e.g., heat treatment of metals). Heat propagation that would otherwise have thermodynamics, heat transfer, and fluid dynamics are all needed in many design fields. It is the integrated use of these three disciplines that is required for rational and complete analysis of many systems.

Whether the engineer is given an assignment to design a new device or modification to existing process or to predict the performance of a device, the objectives of the design process must be very clear. Subsequent, which aspect of the device, process, or system in which to focus must be well defined. A systematic approach to the design analysis is needed. Figure 1.4 shows a flow diagram of the design process typically take when analyzing and engineering a thermal fluid system. We always begin with the physical system (e.g., the engine of a car). This is reality. The engineer's job is, first, to transfer the physical reality into a physical model and, second, to transfer the physical model into a mathematical model. The actual physical system may be so complex that it is impossible to fully consider each part within process. However, we require that device as reality, a vehicle, or boiler that we understand and recognize to simplify the system sufficiently so that it can be modeled. Once a physical model is developed, then physical laws that govern the process (e.g., a flow, momentum, mass, or energy balance) are used to create the
