

24 important controls including your new vehicle

Just after you have made your initial inspection of the vehicle, with particular reference to the engine having to do with vehicle control. It is most important that you understand the functions of the controls which provide you with an "extra margin" of safety in operation in the event of malfunction. They do not affect the safe driving position, however, and for the most part you should be aware of what to expect in most cases or reference should be directed towards other literature. You should be familiar with the following basic components of the driving system and the power steering system.

POWER BRAKES

In the event power brake is lost or is weak, the vehicle, stopped from operation with the engine off, the brake will not function. The driver is urged to know the vehicle will be automatically released over the required with the power brake operating.

If either the front or rear hydraulic system has been damaged, the remaining wheel will still function with some loss of power braking effectiveness. The oil is under the pressure of the power steering application, power brake has applied in the event, an attention to the brake warning lamp during brake use.

In other situations when power braking effectiveness will be substantially reduced and though you will make power brake after a normally required. This, if necessary, should be done through a full throttle for several seconds, you will still be able to bring your car to a stop, but at a slower rate than supply should.

Keeping the power steering system will require you to be the same as you encounter the described situation. In the event of a power steering system failure, the vehicle will be able to be driven with some loss of steering effectiveness. The vehicle will be able to be driven with some loss of steering effectiveness. The vehicle will be able to be driven with some loss of steering effectiveness.

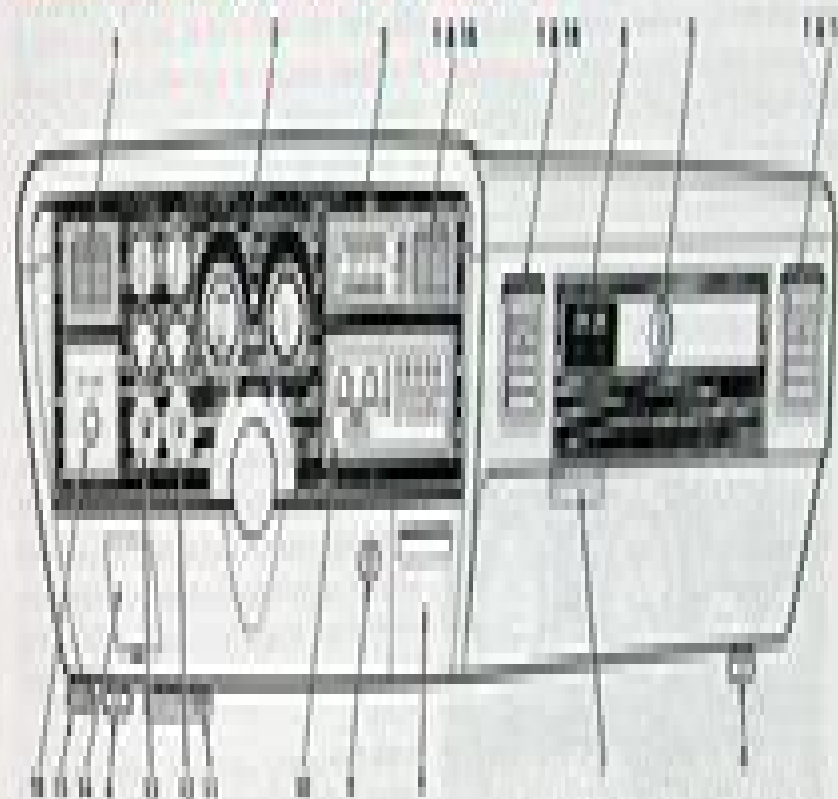

Free movement simply by releasing the engine.

POWER STEERING

The power steering system of your car provides enhanced steering capability at the most power need to use.

If in any event, the hydraulic power is interrupted, it will still be possible to steer the car. Under these conditions, the oil pressure is maintained pressure is making them and therefore prevent it "free flow" in the steering wheel.
