Report highlights

Integrating is the overwhelming challenge today by efforts everywhere – making it harder to evaluate the impact of different design alternatives.

When the time to release a new product is approaching, product development is often a collection of silos. Throughout the product lifecycle and design process, disparate tool-based approaches are siloed, increasing complexity that designers are often grandfathered into the current set of silos. Platforms that can integrate design, engineering & manufacturing simulation, design tools, design data, and product data collaboration. This global comprehensive structure enables strategic design, optimized for multiple disciplines.

Despite the separation of various disciplines, the rapid pace of change and requirements for product development are increasing. Specifically, it will take an additional 20% reduction in time to market for a product to achieve a competitive advantage. Integrating product development processes is a critical success factor for product development.
