

POETRY

Marianne Moore

I. Essay

Q.1. "Poetry" Is a manual for the readers to analyse their interest in poetry. Explain.

Marianne Moore is one of the most fascinating poets of the twentieth century. Written in a conversational tone, the poem titled, 'Poetry' speaks about how poetry is viewed by various kinds of readers. She favours a genuine physical reaction than an intellectual one in the readers.

The poem begins with the expression, "I too dislike it", i.e., the poet too dislikes poetry. Then the poet tells us why many people dislike poetry. She compares poetry to a fiddle. Poetry might seem worthless as it deals with simple things in life. The language of poetry can be ambiguous. But Moore says that poetry has a genuine space. It is understood by genuine readers.

The language of poetry is intense and honest. Poetry doesn't discriminate. It just helps readers to think about the simplest, unnoticed side of life. This may not sound interesting to intellectuals or literary critics. But it can influence genuine readers who can appreciate these qualities. Poetry helps to perceive things clearly. It also helps people to hold on to life. Poetry enables us to admire the simplicity and variety in life.

Moore also warns the readers against half-poets who are not able to write or appreciate genuine poetry. The poet wishes to find poets who create "imaginary gardens with real toads in them". She says, if you demand the raw material of poetry in all its rawness, then, it shows that you are interested in poetry.

II. Short Answer Questions

1. What are the useful things listed by the speaker?

The useful things listed are genuine things such as hands that can grasp, eyes that can dilate, and hair that can rise. They are important because they are useful.

2. According to the poet, how can one find something genuine in poetry?

One can find something genuine in poetry only when there is in it hands that can grasp, eyes that can dilate, and hair that can rise.

3. Is the speaker impatient with 'half poets'? Why?

The speaker is impatient with 'half poets'. They drag things into prominence unnecessarily. The result is poetry that people dislike.

4. How does the speaker define people who are really interested in poetry?

The speaker says that if you demand the raw material of poetry in all its rawness, and that which is genuine, then you are interested in poetry. Poetry enables us to admire the simplicity and variety in life.

5. "We do not admire what we cannot understand." Can you explain?

Admiration or respect for something comes only when we can understand it properly. We do not admire what we cannot understand.
