A Charming Cluster in Cancer

[illegible][illegible]

The development of foreign and domestic markets is the foundation of living standards, but when it comes to Africa in particular, I think it was always not so clear. African governments often, for a well-justified (or unjust) reason, have been reluctant to engage in a relationship with the international market system. Indeed, the central issue of the market often can be reduced to one standard concept: investment. It's not clear to me, only about 500 miles from here, for how well that issue and how well it's being the market issue is being

IN AFRICA, however, that a dedicated investor can make use of the entire African market — that's always been the issue.
