Manual Skill Assessments:

Manual Skills, Handedness, and the Organization of Language in the Brain Gregory Króliczak, Claudia L. R. Gonzalez, David P. Carey, 2019-08-15 Whereas the cerebral specialization for skilled manual actions praxis seems closely linked to dominance for language with both functions left lateralized in the vast majority of humans the neural correlates of hand preference are still less well understood Indeed as a combination of inherited and non inherited genomic factors i e direct parental and concealed environmental contributions handedness in contrast to language is less likely to have strong genetic indices and clearly lateralized functional organization What about eye dominance unimanual and bimanual object manipulation and gestures or attentional systems and the related egocentric or allocentric coding of space Are these different categories functionally and structurally interconnected Is their development and contribution to task performance linked even if they are differently lateralized How are they connected to language learning or its development In trying to understand these relationships and their neural underpinnings we obtain a new insight into fundamental human behaviors which depend either on shared or distinct cerebral resources that must nevertheless be harmonized by higher order cerebral processing In this Research Topic we assembled a dozen of original research contributions as well as articles with more theoretically driven perspectives that directly speak to these issues Hopefully this work will serve as a foundation for further discussions and will stimulate new research in this fascinating domain

Neoconstructivism Scott Johnson, 2010 Arguments over the developmental origins of human knowledge are ancient founded in the writings of Plato Aristotle Descartes Hume and Kant They have also persisted long enough to become a core area of inquiry in cognitive and developmental science Empirical contributions to these debates however appeared only in the last century when Jean Piaget offered the first viable theory of knowledge acquisition that centered on the great themes discussed by Kant object space time and causality The essence of Piaget s theory is constructivism The building of concepts from simpler perceptual and cognitive precursors in particular from experience gained through manual behaviors and observation The constructivist view was disputed by a generation of researchers dedicated to the idea of the competent infant endowed with knowledge say of permanent objects that emerged prior to facile manual behaviors Taking this possibility further it has been proposed that many fundamental cognitive mechanisms reasoning event prediction decision making hypothesis testing and deduction operate independently of all experience and are in this sense innate The competent infant view has an intuitive appeal attested to by its widespread popularity and it enjoys a kind of parsimony It avoids the supposed philosophical pitfall posed by having to account for novel forms of knowledge in inductive learners But this view leaves unaddressed a vital challenge to understand the mechanisms by which new knowledge arises This challenge has now been met The neoconstructivist approach is rooted in Piaget s constructivist emphasis on developmental mechanisms yet also reflects modern advances in our understanding of learning mechanisms cortical development and modeling This book brings together for the first time theoretical views that embrace computational models and developmental neurobiology and emphasize the interplay of time experience and cortical architecture to explain emergent knowledge with an empirical line of research identifying a set of general purpose sensory perceptual and learning mechanisms that guide knowledge acquisition across different domains and through development
