

■ Stands up to the test of time—more than 100 years ago, the Journal was the first to publish the results of the first U.S. census of the deaf.

During the November January, 1993, negotiations, the following information was obtained from the participants in public and confidential sessions and reflects the consensus view. Highly confidential findings identified the greatest fear from investment in the Argentinean oil and gas industry was the political instability, political corruption and security issues and regional conflicts with Brazil, Chile and Peru.

Another concern was corporate governance during the initial investment agreement in 1988, although the state oil company was criticized for poor management and financial practices as presented in key documents. A second disappointing factor was the government's administrative procedures, project completion (Figure 2.2).

During negotiations, participants agreed Argentina is not the country, simply, about the conduct of the activities. In fact, governments policy objectives for oil sector activities and important input costs caused both oil and gas to be expensive and caused the oil sector to be unattractive. During July 1993, the government has adopted a strategy that is to attract investment into the oil and gas sector (see Figure 2.3).

Another critical concern was the need for a commitment to the 1988 oil law. It was the necessary of institutionalization, which had not been implemented in the oil and gas sector (Figure 2.2). The government has not been able to attract foreign investment and investment in the oil and gas sector. The government has not been able to attract foreign investment in the oil and gas sector.
