Abstract: The authors report on findings concerning students' learning patterns. They are unable to identify a single, predominant learning style. Instead, they identify four categories of learners for whom a more individualized approach is recommended.

- Effect of a boundary: separates different media, changes wave speed

It provides evidence as different study strategies increase the chance of learning about a concept through repetition. This process of repetition was not initially used purely to retain recall or repetition in language acquisition. According to research in psychology, reading a text several times helps to increase the chance of understanding a concept. This is because the more you read, the more you are able to identify the main points of the text. This is why it is important to read a text several times before you can understand it. This is why it is important to read a text several times before you can understand it.
