Simple Adaptive Strategies: From Regret-matching To Uncoupled Dynamics Sergiu Hart, Andreu Mas-colell, 2013-01-22 This volume collects almost two decades of joint work of Sergiu Hart and Andreu Mas Colell on game dynamics and equilibria The starting point was the introduction of the adaptive strategy called regret matching which on the one hand is simple and natural and on the other is shown to lead to correlated equilibria This initial finding boundedly rational behavior that yields fully rational outcomes in the long run generated a large body of work on the dynamics of simple adaptive strategies In particular a natural condition on dynamics was identified uncoupledness whereby decision makers do not know each other's payoffs and utilities so while chosen actions may be observable the motivations are not This condition turns out to severely limit the equilibria that can be reached Interestingly there are connections to the behavioral and neurobiological sciences and also to computer science and engineering e.g. via notions of regret Simple Adaptive Strategies is self contained and unified in its presentation Together with the formal treatment of concepts theorems and proofs significant space is devoted to informal explanations and illuminating examples It may be used for advanced graduate courses in game theory economics mathematics computer science engineering and for further research
