

In today's activity, you and your group will examine alpha particles decaying using a simulation, and then use things you know to answer the questions. Read yourself instructions before using the Alpha Decay simulation. Steps/Notes column will be used to help you keep track of things.

After the simulation opens, click on Alpha Decay. The number that will be investigated is particles/100.

1. How many particles are emitted every particle 100 times?

Approximately 100 particles are emitted every 100 times.

2. After particles 100 decay, what stable nucleus is formed?

The stable nucleus is 100 protons and 100 neutrons.

3. Draw the stable nucleus design when particles 100 decay (draw 100% after about the same number).

Each nucleus has 100 protons and 100 neutrons.

4. Draw any other nucleus that is formed during the simulation again.

5. Draw the daughter nucleus after the decay occurs after about 100 particles that is emitted from the nucleus completely.

The daughter nucleus is formed after about 100 particles.

6. If particles is a nucleus alpha particle, and is made of two protons and two neutrons, if you know this, explain the simulation, could you have predicted the identity of the stable nucleus that is formed?

Yes, because the alpha particle is made of two protons and two neutrons, so the stable nucleus is formed.

7. What is the half-life of particles 100?

Approximately 100 particles 100 times.
