1. The first step in the process of identifying a research problem is to determine the general area of interest. This involves a broad search of the literature to identify key concepts and theories. The next step is to narrow down the focus of the study by identifying specific research questions or hypotheses. This is often done through a review of the literature and consultation with experts in the field. The final step is to develop a research design that will allow the researcher to collect and analyze data in a systematic and rigorous manner. This involves choosing appropriate methods and procedures, and ensuring that the study is conducted in a way that minimizes bias and maximizes the validity of the findings.
