

Small business owners are not alone in their struggles. Many large corporations are also facing challenges in the current economic environment. For example, a recent survey by the National Bureau of Economic Research found that 60% of large corporations reported a decline in sales in the third quarter of 2009. This is a significant decline, especially for companies that were previously reporting strong growth. The survey also found that 40% of large corporations reported a decline in profits in the same period. These findings suggest that the current economic environment is challenging for businesses of all sizes.
