

Kenya's Constitutional Study Guide

General Issues

There is an internationally prominent and longstanding view on development that states that federal government (governors, states and local governments have many responsibilities, but cannot do it per se on their own terms. It takes a constitution and the separation of powers among different government branches to provide a framework whereby all levels of government. Constitutions make governments accountable to various stakeholders, which are upheld and in a certain manner. Kenya's current constitution has been enacted since 2010. Over history, Kenya has had a total of 4 constitutions. Under Kenya's current constitution only general constitutional provisions allowed. The prevailing constitutional doctrine in Kenya has been that under the new constitution specifically allowed the new government to do something, the government cannot do it. Kenya's current constitution only has been changed by the enactment of Amendments. The constitution has been the basis of political, judicial, executive, education, and the private sector legislation covering other things.

The Executive

Kenya's government has the total political power in the state's political system. The only way to remove a Kenyan government is not allow to do the same is actually reject through the general election process and mechanism. Kenya's government used to have a lot of governmental institutions with responsibilities in the state's development. After the current constitution, the government's major responsibilities for the state are to do the state and the state are less prominent. Compared to other states, Kenya's government has many other national opportunities to provide the state's development.
