

QUESTION 1

Sample Response

Candidate C

The idea of transforming into someone or something else has long fascinated us. This notion of shapeshifting emerged in the earliest mythology and has intrigued the likes of 20th-century writers from Wilde to Tolkien to Kafka and even to J.K. Rowling. Any transformation or metamorphosis usually involves an awakening, a change in perspective that moves a narrative forward or perhaps challenges the protagonist. The texts here are also concerned with the idea of physical transformation, specifically, representations of the “shrinking man,” imaginative or real.

Imagination is the key component for any tale of transformation, whether it be Barbellion’s journal entry that envisions himself first as an insect, then a hawk, then a falcon, or the Hollywood tale of The Incredible Shrinking Man that brings a nightmarish vision to the silver screen. Barbellion’s journal, an extract from his 1939 “The Journal of a ‘Shrinking Man,’” is one continuously in pace of nature. And it does so by giving itself over to a very spring-morning and looking upon the world through a very different lens. The idle morning evokes a kind of stream of consciousness, letting the narrative slowly move over the countryside and inhabit its mysteries.

It takes perhaps less imagination to assume the role of the film’s shrinking man, as the array of storyboard panels offers the terror in black and white snapshots. Presented in almost comic-book format, the underlying captions of each panel are clipped synopses of key plot details – and all offered with an exclamatory move through increasing challenges leaving off with the final dubious chapter: “Will our hero survive?” we wonder as the climactic moment leaves the audience in suspense (much like the ellipsis following the opening “THE TERROR MOUNTS!...”). Its purpose is to provoke and ultimately invite its audience in, unsure of just how the “shrinking man” can survive monstrous cats and gangster uppers. The draw most likely is for audiences that relish the suspense and fright of a horror film. The copious use of exclamatory marks evokes what we imagine is a heightened sense of fright that pervades much of the film.

This may appeal to us in part because we like to vicariously experience life from different vantage points. Film presents these fabricated worlds for us, in both sights and sound. But Barbellion’s journal shares his very personal journey of imagination. His journey – with his love beside him – situates the reader in a pastoral setting with a wider view: identity and figuratively off the water below. Plucking up flowers or “kisses by the roots” (21-22), they nuzzle down amid the buttercups to view a world from the perspective of an insect – where grass is a “forest” and chickens are “enormous birds” (21, 22). His allusion to Swift’s Gulliver reminds the reader of a world turned on its end, and just as Gulliver awakens in the grass to discover a world of six-inch humans, Barbellion imagines himself “so small as to be able to climb a buttercup” or “so big as to be able to pull up a beech-tree with
