

Separating a Synthetic Pain Relief Mixture

Lab™ Chemistry 100 Series 3, Investigation 9
 An Advanced Inquiry Lab

Background

Students learn about the concept of mixtures, as physical blends, of which only heterogeneous mixtures. The term mixture is used to describe a combination of two or more substances that are not chemically bonded together. The components of a mixture retain their individual chemical identities, as well as many of their unique physical properties. The purpose of this investigation is to use the physical properties of components in a heterogeneous mixture to separate the components of the mixture.

Objectives

1. Identify the components of a mixture.
2. Identify the physical properties of the components of a mixture.
3. Identify the chemical properties of the components of a mixture.
4. Identify the physical properties of the components of a mixture.

Background

A mixture is a combination of two or more pure substances that have their unique chemical identities and properties. Some mixtures are homogeneous mixtures, such as solutions, and some are heterogeneous mixtures, such as suspensions. In a homogeneous mixture, the components are evenly distributed throughout the mixture, and the mixture has a uniform composition. In a heterogeneous mixture, the components are not evenly distributed throughout the mixture, and the mixture has a non-uniform composition. The purpose of this investigation is to use the physical properties of components in a heterogeneous mixture to separate the components of the mixture.

Students will use their knowledge of the various physical properties of substances to separate a mixture of two or more pure substances. The purpose of this investigation is to use the physical properties of the components of a mixture to separate the components of the mixture.
